Starting from... (initiatives in progress/data-set already available/...)

Analogue recording of the hamlets (text, plan and photos). The text was written by a historian of art, the plan established by a group of students of the University of Applied Sciences, Basel, department of architecture. A temporary employee, performing his civil service, took the photos with a classical, professional photo equipment.

Operational tools to be applied:

The aim is to create planning instruments to protect and preserve the overall appearance of the two hamlets. Firstly, the analogue is transformed into digital data. This information is the basis for publications that help to start within the community a dialogue about preservation and (spatial) development of the historical settlement. Following this step, a study works out how the the local people's appreciation of sites of historic interest can be improved. The final intention is to increase the participation of the local people.
